UnLitigate: Website Brief

Prepared by Anushka Jena, for the website designer/developer

About the project

UnLitigate is a student-led, non-commercial social impact initiative that promotes voluntary mediation as the first choice for resolving disputes in India, instead of years of court litigation. It is an Impact Project backed by Students for Liberty. The work has three parts: an awareness campaign (Instagram reels, LinkedIn and this website), a network of trained student mediators working under accredited supervision, and referral partnerships with university mediation centres.

The idea behind the brand: choosing mediation is not giving up or compromising. It is taking control of your own dispute.

What the website is for

The website is the project's main home online. It has three jobs:

1. Explain what mediation is, why it can be a better first step than court and for what kind of disputes, in plain language.
2. Build trust. Visitors, including mediation centres, universities and lawyers, should see that this is a serious, credible initiative.
3. Take enquiries. It should give people a simple way to get in touch about a dispute, which will feed our pilot intake process.

This is a lean first version. A full site with a blog and extra features comes later, once we have results to publish.

Audience

The site has to work for three groups at once.

1. Primary: small business owners and families in big cities (Delhi, Mumbai, Bangalore, Hyderabad) who are in or heading into a court dispute. They are stressed, short on time and money, and often distrust the legal system. Many have never heard of mediation. Most will arrive on a phone, from an Instagram link.
2. Secondary: Gen Z and millennial professionals who value independence and efficiency. They decide within seconds whether a site looks credible.
3. Behind the scenes: universities, mediation centres and lawyers, the institutions we want as partners. They will check the site before taking us seriously.

Because of this, the site must be mobile-first, fast, and written in clear, simple language with no legal jargon.

Tone and look

We want visitors to feel: calm, in control, reassured and able to take a next step.

Personality: trustworthy, approachable, modern, quietly confident and clear.

It should feel:

- Credible without being stiff: serious enough for a mediation centre, warm enough for a worried family
- Empowering, not apologetic: mediation is a strong choice, not the soft option
- Calm and uncluttered, with plenty of white space and one clear action per section

It should not feel:

- Like a court or law firm: no scales of justice, gavels, pillars or dark navy-and-gold formality
- Aggressive or adversarial
- Like a charity appeal
- Cold or corporate, like a generic fintech or consultancy
- Cluttered, with pop-ups, autoplay media or heavy animation

The logo, colours and fonts are being designed separately. Please build the site so it can take them easily once they are ready, and tell me what you need from that process (for example a logo file and colour codes).

Structure: lean first version

A single scrolling page, or at most three or four short pages, covering:

1. Hero: one clear line about mediation first, a short supporting line, and a button leading to the enquiry form
2. The problem: a few lines on how long court cases take and what they cost families and small businesses
3. What mediation is, and how it works: three or four simple steps
4. What UnLitigate does: the three parts of the project, shown simply
5. About us: who is behind it, with photos and short bios
6. Get in touch: the enquiry form, with a note on confidentiality
7. Footer: links to Instagram and LinkedIn, contact email, and a short privacy note

Please design it so a blog or extra pages can be added later without rebuilding.

Functions needed

- Enquiry form with name, city, type of dispute (business, family, property, other), a short description, and preferred way to be contacted. It needs a consent tick box. Submissions should go to an email address and, ideally, a spreadsheet.
- Do not collect sensitive details (such as ID numbers or financial account details) through the form.

- Links to Instagram and LinkedIn, and Instagram content showing on the page if it can be done simply.
- Basic search visibility settings: page titles, descriptions and a share preview image.
- Simple analytics, so we can see visits and where they come from.
- A short disclaimer that the site gives general information about mediation and is not legal advice.
- Good accessibility: readable text size and contrast, and alt text on images.
- The site should load quickly on a mobile connection.

Content

I will provide the written content, photos and links. Please leave sensible space for it and tell me what lengths you need for each section. English first; Hindi or other languages may come later, so please do not build in a way that makes adding them difficult.

Ownership and set-up

- The domain and hosting should be registered in my name, or transferred to me, with full admin access.
- Please build on a platform that a non-technical team member can edit without code (for example a page builder or a simple CMS). Tell me which platform you recommend and why.
- Please share a short hand-over guide showing how to edit text, images and the form.
- All files, designs and code should belong to the project.

Happy to talk it through on a quick call once you have read this.

Thank you, Anushka Jena
